Fact Sheet, IWPR #R489, March 2018

The Economic Status of Women in The District of Columbia

Women in The District of Columbia have made considerable advances in recent years but still face inequities that often prevent them from reaching their full potential. Since the 2004 Status of Women in the States report was published, the gender wage gap in The District of Columbia has widened, a higher percentage of women have bachelor's degrees, and a larger share of women live in poverty. The District of Columbia still ranks in the best third in the nation for both women's Employment & Earnings and Poverty & Opportunity.

If current trends continue,
women in The District of Columbia will not see equal pay until the year 2055.¹

Key Findings

- The District of Columbia's grade for women's Employment & Earnings, A, has improved since the 2004 Status of Women in the States report (Table 1). Its grade for women's Poverty & Opportunity, B, has remained unchanged since 2004.
- Women in The District of Columbia aged 16 and older who work full-time, year-round have median annual earnings of $65,000, which is 86.7 cents on the dollar compared with men who work full-time, year-round (Table 1). Native American women earn just 34 cents for every dollar earned by White men (Table 2).
- If employed women in The District of Columbia were paid the same as comparable men, their poverty rate would be reduced by nearly half and poverty among employed single mothers would drop by more than two-fifths (Figure 1).²
- 67.4 percent of women in The District of Columbia aged 16 and older are in the labor force, compared with 70.6 percent of men (Table 1). Among women, White women have the highest labor force participation rate, at 77.3 percent (Table 2). Data for Native American women are unavailable for D.C.
- A growing share of employed women in The District of Columbia are in managerial or professional occupations. About 61 percent of women hold these positions, which tend to require a four-year degree and often have higher wages and employment benefits.
- In The District of Columbia, 42.7 percent of businesses in 2012 were owned by women, up from 34.5 percent in 2007.
- Approximately 56 percent of women aged 25 and older in The District of Columbia have a bachelor's degree or higher, an increase of about 20 percentage points since 2000 (Table 1).
- 96.4 percent of The District of Columbia's women aged 18 to 64 have health insurance coverage, which is above the national average for women of 89.4 percent (Table 1).
- The District of Columbia ranks 51st nationally for the share of women in poverty; 26.7 percent of women in the state aged 18 and older are in poverty, compared with 25.4 percent of The District of Columbia's men (Table 1).

Median Annual Earnings for Women and Men in The District of Columbia Working Full-Time, Year-Round, by Race and Ethnicity, 2016

Notes: Calculated using three years of data (2014-2016) from the American Community Survey. Racial groups are non-Hispanic. Calculated by the Institute for Women's Policy Research.

NOTES

1. Linear projection based on rate of progress in closing the gender wage gap since 1959. Projection is based on the ratio of women's to men's earnings among full-time, year-round workers aged 16 and older. Calculations are based on the Decennial Censuses from 1960 through 2000, and 2001-2015 American Community Survey microdata.
2. Comparable includes women and men of the same age and level of education, who work the same number of hours, and have the same urban/rural status.

About the Institute for Women's Policy Research

The Institute for Women's Policy Research (IWPR) conducts rigorous research and disseminates its findings to address the needs of women, promote public dialogue, and strengthen families, communities, and societies. The Institute's research strives to give voice to the needs of women from diverse ethnic and racial backgrounds across the income spectrum and to ensure that their perspectives enter the public debate on ending discrimination and inequality, improving opportunity, and increasing economic security for women and families. The Institute works with policymakers, scholars, and public interest groups to design, execute, and disseminate research and to build a diverse network of individuals and organizations that conduct and use women-oriented policy research. IWPR's work is supported by foundation grants, government grants and contracts, donations from individuals, and contributions from organizations and corporations. IWPR is a 501(c)(3) tax-exempt organization that also works in affiliation with the Program on Gender Analysis in Economics at American University.

About The Status of Women in the States

This Fact Sheet is a part of the Institute for Women's Policy Research's series on the status of women across the United States, begun in 1996. The Status of Women in the States project uses data from U.S. government and other sources to analyze women's status in each state and the United States overall, rank and grade states on a set of indicators for six topical areas, and provide additional data on women's status in states across the nation. The Institute for Women's Policy Research has published individual reports on the status of women since 1996 in each state and the District of Columbia. The reports have been used to highlight women's progress and the obstacles they continue to face and to encourage policy and programmatic changes that can improve women's opportunities.
